

Latinx Nonprofits Can Benefit From Gilead's $20M COVID-19 Fund

Because many Latinx groups already receive grants from the drugmaker, they can apply for new funds during the coronavirus crisis.

A number of nonprofits that serve Latino communities are eligible to receive funding from pharma giant Gilead Sciences through its newly launched $20 million global fund.

The fund's goal is to ensure that nonprofit groups it already supports can remain open and operational during the COVID-19 pandemic.

"Around the world, we are hearing from nonprofit organizations that they are struggling to meet the needs of the communities they serve during the COVID-19 crisis," said Brett Pletcher, Gilead's general counsel and executive vice president of corporate affairs, in a press release. "For many years, we have stood with community-based organizations that provide critical support to people living with HIV, viral hepatitis, cancer and other illnesses. It is in recognition of the importance of their work that we are launching this fund to help these groups remain financially sustainable for the long term."

The fund is called the global Gilead CARES (COVID-19 Acute Relief and Emergency Support) Grantee Fund. Up to $20 million will be available to nonprofits that are current Gilead grantees facing closure or being forced to suspend some of their vital services.

Numerous Latino groups will be eligible because they already receive grants from Gilead. These include, for example, Florida's High Impacto, Georgia's National AIDS Education Services for Minorities, Los Angeles's Translatin@ Coalition, North Carolina's Latino Commission on AIDS, New York City's Translatinx Network, and Washington, DC's Casa Ruby. They've received Gilead funding through its Age Positively, COMPASS and TRANScend initiatives that support groups focused on older people with HIV, the epidemic in the South and the transgender community, respectively.

Organizations can apply for up to $100,000 in emergency assistance; applications for grants are available on Gilead's online grants management system. More information about its grant funding

In addition, Gilead is donating $1 million to the San Mateo County Strong Fund to support businesses and nonprofits in the California county where Gilead is based, plus $1 million to the Mayor's Fund for Los Angeles.
